Judge Jordan Dissented.

l'Judge Jordan wrote a dissenting and concurring opinion, holding that the Fed-eral taxes paid by the road should have been deducted from the amount recovered. In the first place the Supreme Court olds that if the Legislature of 1897 a company or in any way change the obli-cations under the charter of 1847, it is in-

The court says the rights of the parties must be determined under the contract of 1847, the same as if no legislation had been benacted in 1897. To the extent that the act of 1897 provides a remedy for enforcing the old obligations, it is valid, the court holds. The decision, written by Judge Hadley, fills forty-nine typewritten pages. The controversy grew out of the construction of Section 23 of the charter of 1847, which provided that certain surplus profit His wife and children left Saturday night.
